2019 Packer Draft: Breakouts or Fake Outs? The Draft Recap.

By: Steve Ross

The Packers under Brian Gutekunst have shown to be more aggressively drafting athletes who have experience playing multiple positions. My initial thoughts of the Draft are positive, I think the Packers found players that have higher upside than typically found at the position taken in the draft. With that said, many of those picks carry higher risk because something else caused the player to slip, suspensions, limited or poor tape, age, or a combination of those.

I like this class more after the first round. While I really like Savage, the price to get him was steep and Gary was on my do not draft in round one list. The next 3 picks for the Packers I thought brought great value in positions of need all of whom have enough talent to potentially start for the team. If he comes in with his head right Williams has the chance to be the steal of the draft. Hollman and Summers have the athletic traits to play in the NFL but are both raw and will need to develop. Like with all draft we won’t know what we have for 2-3 seasons, but for the second season in a row the Packer drafter athletes.

ROUND 1: No. 12 overall: RASHAUN GARY, DE
AGE: 21 HT: 6-4 3/8 WT: 277 40-yard dash: 4.58 College: Michigan

One of the more polarizing prospects in the draft, because his athletic gifts did not translate to domination at the collegiate level. Also concerning is that he only played in nine games last season due to a shoulder injury, some have reported as a torn labrum, though Gary and the Packers say is the less serious AC joint subluxation. Gary was the nations top-rated recruit coming out of High School in New Jersey. Gary is one of the 3 or 4 most athletic prospects in the draft with a rare blend of size, speed, strength, and agility shown by an excellent 4.58 40-yard dash nearly the same as last year’s corner, Josh Jackson (4.56), who weighs 80 pounds less. The concern with Gary comes down to his lack of production while at Michigan, only 3.5 sacks last year and 9.5 total in his career of 22 games. His best move as a pass rusher is the straight bull rush, his speed off the line makes offensive linemen uncomfortable that combine with this power (26 bench press reps of 225lbs) can lead to wins. His counter move is underdeveloped, though he did show a limited swim move at times. Frankly, I liked his tape against the run more than as a pass rusher he uses his long arms well at the point of attack to get space to make plays for himself or others. To me Gary’s Best tape came his Sophomore year, while playing the

Defensive end position, that year he was someone teams schemed to stay away from and constantly double and sometimes triple teamed him (watch the 2017 Wisconsin, Michigan Game). This past season the tape was underwhelming, the effort seemed less, as he was not chasing plays down from behind, and he was not the dominant force you would expect a man with his gifts to be. I also don't think he played as fast as his works outs would suggest, meaning his read and react may not be as good as you would like. This is a High-risk high reward pick for the Packers, if Gary was indeed the Packers guy, I would have liked to have seen them trade back to take him later in round 1.

How He fits: He is intended to play the outside Linebacker spot with the two new Smith free agents, though I think he might fit better replacing Dean Lowery along the Defensive line

Ceiling: Athletically he's a Stud, and if he can get the production to match the Athleticism, he could be an All-Pro

Floor: Rotational Defensive end and/or Rush Linebacker

ROUND 1: No. 21 overall:
DARNELL SAVAGE, SAFTEY
AGE: 22 HT: 5-10 3/4 WT: 196
40-yard dash: 4.36
College: Maryland

This was my guy going into the draft, I loved the tape, effort, and how he potentially fits for the Packers. I had hoped they would get him at 30, but if he becomes the player I think he can, it won't matter. Savage is a ball hawking safety who plays with great speed, vision, aggression and effort. On tape Savage jumps out because anytime something good happens for the Maryland Defense, Savage is around either making the play or directly affecting the play. His speed shows well on tape often coming from out of frame to make the play his closing speed is terrific both on the passing game and in tackling. I believe this closing speed can help limit the damage of the short throws to running backs or slot receivers in bunched sets that hurt the Packer's so much the past few years. Despite being small, Savage was a willing tackler who played well in run support. While possessing good vision and football instincts Savage missed too many tackles (38) in his college career, these were mostly the result of over running plays or racing to get to a play and not coming settled to a good base to make a strong tackle. These are minor issues and I believe the impact plays far out weigh the misses. Savage was drafted to be your opening game starter at Free Safety.

How He fits: Versatile safety who can play coverage in zone and will be a middle of the field ball hawk for Pettine from Day one.

Ceiling: Day one starter and future pro bowl player who plays himself into a second contract with the Packers

Floor: Low level starter for a year or two that is ultimately replaced for a larger player.

ROUND 2: No. 44 overall:
ELGTON JENKINS,
CENTER & GUARD
AGE: 23 HT: 6-5 WT: 311
40-yard dash: N/A
College: Mississippi

Jenkins was considered one of the best Centers in the draft, but with Cory Linsley well established as the Packers starting Center that means Jenkins must be slotted for Guard. Jenkins was a Collegiate work horse playing in 49 games in his career with starts at left tackle, right tackle, left guard and Center (26). During his senior season he allowed only five QB pressures and Mississippi State averaged a league best 5.9 yards per carry on middle designed runs in the SEC. He had an exceptional Senior bowl mostly while playing Center, but also played guard, though he did not fair as well in individual drills. Jenkins has long arms and a violent first punch. He does an excellent job of initiating first contact with his defender, which means right tackle is still possible. I did not see him get cleanly beat once on the tape, which is impressive given the talent he played against. He has long arms (34") and has shown excellent balance, and very good feet for an interior lineman. Jenkins played at a very high level against the most athletic and deepest collegiate conference in the country, if his skills at center translate to right guard, he could be your starter this coming season.

How he fits: Interior offensive line depth, competing with Billy Turner and Cole Madison to be the starting right Guard.

Ceiling: Starting Right Guard for the Packers for the next several seasons.

Floor: Back up Offensive line depth due to his versatility.

ROUND 3: No. 75 overall:
JACE STERNBERGER, TE
AGE: 22 HT: 6-5 WT: 251
40-yard dash: 4.75
College: Texas A&M

First Team all SEC Tight end and AP All-American at TE. Only played one year at Texas A&M, but he was ultra-productive in his lone season with 48 receptions, 832 yards, and 10 touchdowns. Sternberger did almost all his damage when flexed out. He is more quick than fast, doing a nice job creating separation in and out of breaks. He looks very natural catching the ball, always in his hands away from his body, and showed nice run after the catch ability. He made a lot of big plays for A&M averaging over 17 yards per catch, and has enough athleticism for that to translate to the next level. The knock on Sternberger comes in his ability to block, there is almost no tape of him blocking as he was not really asked to do much of this at A&M. Making that portion of his game a major question mark and having two tight ends that can't block could give away the run pass call pre snap. Matt LaFleur come from the Shanahan and McVay coaching tree, and if he follows in the scheming of those two coaches you can expect the Tight end to be heavily featured in the Packers new offense, so expect to see a lot from Sternberger especially late in the year.

How He fits: Immediately competes against the aging Graham for the starting tight end position

Ceiling: The Packers Starting Tight End for at least the next four seasons

Floor: Limited ability blocking hampers his ability to be a starter and he is limited to being a situational backup.

ROUND 5: No. 150 overall:
KINGSLEY KEKE, DE
AGE: 23 HT: 6-2 5/8 WT: 288
40-yard dash: 4.95
College: Texas A&M

Keke has been a full-time starter the past two seasons and had by far his best year as a Senior posting 51 tackles 11 for losses and a team leading 7 sacks. Something that has become a bit of a trend in the two drafts under Brian Gutekunst, Keke is a very good athlete for his position, who has played multiple positions. He dropped nearly 20 pounds for his senior season and played Defensive end, while previously playing in a four-point stance at Defensive Tackle. He had an outstanding senior bowl winning more than 50% of his one on one pass rush drills showing great bend off the edge for a player of his size, though I did not see as much of that in game tape. He used stunts, his speed, and athleticism very effectively to get most of his pressures, when he won one on one it was primarily with a bull rush. He has very long arms (34.5") but does not always use them effectively to initiate contact and shed blockers. He has a very large frame and actually looks thin at 288 pounds so he could allow for additional weight. His effort on tape was above average, but appears raw in hand placement, and has not developed secondary pass rush moves. Most of his production came on the non-conference schedule and against the weaker SEC teams. I believe he has a higher floor than Gary but a lower ceiling though he possesses higher than expected upside for a 5th round pick due to his athletic ability and ability to play multiple positions on the D-line.

How He fits: Immediately gives the Packers more Defensive line depth.

Ceiling: Packers Starter next to Clark in a year or two

Floor: Career Back up lineman whose best position is a 4-3 Defensive tackle which the Packers Don't play

ROUND 6: No. 185 overall:
KA'DAR HOLLMAN, CB
AGE: 24 HT: 6-0 WT: 196
40-yard dash: 4.39
College: Toledo

Once again, the Packers have gone for a great athlete, Hollman 4.39 40 and 6.81 3 cone drill at his pro-day are both exceptional. Hollman lead the MAC in pass breakups with 12, which was a very high number based on how few balls where through his way. At Toledo, Hollman played nearly all his snaps a left outside corner, mostly in press man coverage technique. He is clearly athletic, fluid, and does a very good job of shadowing the receiver, which is why so few balls where thrown his way in college. With a corner of his talent I would like to see them shadow the other team's best receiver all over the field. His eye balance is poor, focusing almost solely on the receiver, meaning he is not watching the QB enough limiting his ball awareness, which is why he had so few interception. This also leads to issues in flowing to the ball when the play isn't to his side of the field. He does not support the run well and did not appear to be a willing tackler. The fact that he will also be a 25-year-old rookie is another reason he slid in the draft this far. His talent and tape suggest he should have gone higher, so I think this is a good value pick due to his potential upside.

How He fits: Secondary Depth

Ceiling: Second or Third corner on the team a solid contributor on the Defense

Floor: His lack of eye balance and inability to play zone limit his options and he is cut.

ROUND 6: No. 194 overall:
DEXTER WILLIAMS, RB
AGE: 23 HT: 5-11 WT: 209
40-yard dash: 4.57
College: Notre Dame

Williams was another top 100 college recruit, however his time at Notre Dame was marked with trouble and suspensions. He was arrested with teammates for marijuana possession and possessing a handgun without a license; the latter charge was dropped when a teammate confessed to the handgun possession. Then after being named Notre Dame's starting running back this past season, he was suspended for 4 games. When he came back, he was very productive rushing for 995 yards and 12 scores on 158 carries (6.3 per) while also catching 16 passes out of the backfield for 133 yards (8.3 average) and one touchdown. This could be a great value pick for the Packers as Aaron Jones has struggled to stay healthy and Jamaal Williams is lacking the burst to be a dynamic back, Williams should have a chance. His tape limited as he didn't play a lot until his senior year. He shows good forward lean and pad level, good vision in traffic at the line and the ability to cut back and get downhill with enough of a burst to make big plays. View him as a nice blend between Jones and Williams, with better athleticism and speed than Williams and larger and a better blocker than Jones. While he did not catch the ball much at Notre Dame, he looked natural as a pass catcher during senior bowl work outs. He also has limited wear and tear on his body due to limited carries at Notre Dame. There have been many late round running back draft steals lately and Williams has the tools to be one, if he can show the necessary maturity, discipline and work ethic to be best he can be. This is an excellent value pick at this stage in the draft.

How He fits: Running Back Depth

Ceiling: Earns the Coaching Staffs trust and becomes the Packers every down back with Jones as his change of pace

Floor: Back up running back for a year or two and then released

ROUND 7: No. 226 overall:
TY SUMMERS, ILB
AGE: 23 HT: 6-1 WT: 241
College: TCU

Gutekunst has put a premium on getting more athletic and this is another example of that, Summers ran an exceptional 40 of 4.51, put up 27 reps of 225#, 36" vertical and 123" Broad jump. These numbers are all exceptional for his position. Earned the name Captain America from his teammates and was the defensive play caller on Gary Patterson's squad where he played both linebacker and defensive end. He plays with very good effort, but the athleticism seen in shorts does not consistently show up on the field. Plays tentatively taking too long to diagnose plays as a linebacker versus reacting and playing downhill. Simply put you did not see the splash plays you would expect based off testing. Another concerning item is that he came off the field on passing downs as a linebacker or was moved to Defensive end, meaning they did not trust him in coverage. A player with TJ Edwards (UW) tape and Ty Summers athletic ability would have been a first-round selection. At this stage in the draft to get an athlete of Summers ability who plays hard is a good value if he develops that is a bonus, if not you at least have a special team's player for a few seasons.

How He fits: An Athlete and Developmental Middle Linebacker

Ceiling: Back up Middle Line Backer and Special Teams Standout

Floor: Practice squad year one, doesn't develop and is done after 2020 camp.

2018 Breakout & Fake Outs Review

Jaire Alexander, CB: Leaning towards Breakout – he performed very well and will likely contribute every game.

Josh Jackson, CB: TBD - disappointing first year but a lot of potential.

Oren Burks, LB: TBD - hurt too much of the season.

J'Mon Moore, WR: Leaning towards Fake Out – worst performing rookie WR on the team.

Cole Madison, OL: TBD - didn't report last year due to personal issues. He's back this year though.

JK Scott, Punter: Leaning towards Breakout – he had some key punts throughout the year.

Marquez Valdes-Scantling, WR: Breakout – he led the rookie receivers last year in overall performance.

Equanimeous St. Brown, WR: TBD – he performed well and will likely become a breakout with more time.

James Looney, DE: TBD – only played in 3 games

Kendall Donnerson, OLB: TBD – Still on the roster

Hunter Bradley, LS: Breakout – Still snapping

For the most part Steve's 2018 predictions were fairly accurate.
 Nice work Steve!
